As the popularity of English grows with each passing day and throughout the world, English teachers feel the need to change the methods of teaching their language. However, this article does not state that none of these traditional manners are bad or harm to students. In principle, they proved useful today. There are many opportunities for students to gain confidence in learning English, which learns language not only for pleasure. As all the people know teaching and learning are very important for us. Besides that teaching and learning are parts of our life. These two things are very interesting, amusing, and significant. Because when you read you learn something. Some people think that they must learn only English grammar. It is wrong thing. If you don’t know English words, phrases, you won’t resolve English tests, communicate with someone, write essays, read a lot of kinds of books. Nowadays English vocabulary is very important. Because vocabulary is inseparable part of English language. Here we are going to give information about different interactive games that are very interesting for teaching vocabulary.

Vocabulary Bingo. After teachers put students through the typical curriculum, it is time to engage students in funny and interesting activities that will help them retain the information. One such activity is vocabulary bingo. Have the students make bingo cards, placing words they just learned in the various places on the cards. Then, read the definition of the word. If the students have that word, they will color in the box on their cards where it exists. This helps students put the definition with the word itself. Teachers can also reward students who complete bingo with prizes or extra credit points. Word charting. The goal of teaching vocabulary is to expand a student’s word knowledge. One way to do this is by encouraging students to use vocabulary words in their lives. This is where word charting comes in. Teachers can encourage students to do this outside of the classroom while they are at home. For instance, if students have just been taught the word “cacophony”, which means discordant sounds, encourage them to look for real life scenarios to use it.

Give extra credit or prizes to the students that chart the most vocabulary words over a certain time in their proper contexts.

Short stories. Another way to make teaching vocabulary more fun is to have students create a short story or screenplay using the word they have just learned. Teachers can also make this a final project or midterm project. Typically, this will go over much better than a final exam, and students will be more willing to engage and get creative with such a task, especially if a large portion of their grade depends on it.

Write songs. To piggyback off the previous point, another way for students to better retain words is to have them write songs using them.

This also a project that will get the creative juices flowing with students.

Break them up into groups and have them write lyrics with their new words in context of their definitions. Be sure to also offer extra credit for students who go above and beyond just writing lyrics, such as for groups that actually put music with their songs or record them to play them back to rest of the class. Writing poetry with newly learned words is another option that could fall within this category.

Pictionary. Games have proved to be better way to engage students and help them retain information in the classroom. And one game that could apply to new vocabulary words is Pictionary. Have students divide into groups and then diagram word definition as best as they can, as their peers attempt to guess them. Another game might consist of students acting out words in short skits for classmates to guess. Such games are fun and sure to produce a lot of laughs as students learn new words. All and all, we can use some types of ways. Even though many people see learning new vocabulary as a very black or white issues, these people must study vocabulary because of their knowledge. If many people don't learn vocabulary they will face to difficulties. So we try to manage these issues. Another suggestion is The Keyword Method. This is very useful method for us. The method requires deeper cognitive processing, thus increasing the likelihood of retention. He said: "Typically, a child needs to hear a new word 4 and 12 times before it is added to his vocabulary, when you introduce your child to new word, try to keep a mental note of it and work to use it again in your conversations with your child". One of the beauties of the English language is the diversity of the vocabulary available to its users. It is also one of the things that can make English hard to get to grips with. Misused vocabulary can make even the most fluent speakers seem inexperienced; on the other hand getting it right gives the speaker confidence and an increased ability to express them. Furthermore, a good vocabulary ranges increasing reading comprehension, ability in technical subjects and written ability. It also important to use the word in a variety of different contexts, wherever it applies. Don't be afraid to throw in a word that you had focused on previously as well. Repeated exposure is one of the best ways to master new vocabulary words.
